This was once chardonnay-like across its oak-derived vanillins and lees-inflected midriff, mealy and creamy. Now a swan, exhibiting more gris-centric genetics and all the better for it: slippery. Viscous. Nashi pear and ripe apple gelato flavours teem across the midriff, directed by a sash of almond-soused phenolics and mineral tension. About as good as gris gets.

Stunning intensity. It's dry, spice ridden and structural but the intensity of flavour strikes you from the outset. This is some kind of pinot gris. Nashi pear, apple, cloves, dry spices, nuts - there's much to experience here. This is gold medal standard, hands down
