More tapered than the Massale, albeit, still plenty of fruit: cherry pith and satsuma plum meander along a twine of vanillin oak, clove-doused tannins and maritime acidity, expansive and meandering. A diplomatic weave of tension, loosely knit, with abundant fruit.

The Estate release is always a good representation of where Kooyong pinot noir is at – in a given season.

There's plenty of meat on this wine's bones. It's a spicy, stewy, chewy pinot noir with macerated cherry, woody spice, plum and vanilla flavours rolling through the palate. Weight, power, perfume and shape are all on the positive side of the ledger; finesse perhaps less so. Needless to say, pure drinking enjoyment can easily be found here.

A complex array of red and black fruits, spice and barrel ferment characters jump from the glass. The palate shows precision and vigour, a long sweep of red cherry fruit, guided to the finish by elegant, refined tannins. Lovely stuff.
