

Quartier Pinot Noir 2015 – Reviews

WBM, January/February 2017

An unashamedly elegant, soft and approachable pinot of primary red-berry fruit character, hints of anise and sarsaparilla, structured with very fine fruit tannins. An engaging and immediate style.

Mornington Peninsula's influence on pinot tends more to the lighter end of the varietal spectrum, though not lacking intensity, and here you'll find flint and light toasty oak notes as well as a distinctive smoked meat element. It all hangs together as you move into the expected crimson fruits stage of the palate, though remaining savoury and minerally.

It's happy days for Pinot fanciers with the 2015 vintage coming on the market now. Spicy, sappy, raspberry, orange peel and cherry. Has plenty of perfume and energy, is medium bodied, juicy and tangy, and carries enough fruit to taper off the sappy herbal flavours. Finish is good too, not that long, but crisp and satisfying. No complaints. Lively and tasty.
