

Port Phillip Estate Morillon Pinot Noir 2017 – Reviews

---

The Wine Front, July 2019

Campbell Mattinson

It's a pinot noir with a bit of brood to it. It's as much red-berried as it is black, but it sits low on the palate, as if grumbling about something. It's not a bad way for a young pinot noir to present. It's flecked with spice, woodsmoke, orange rind and musk, the palate offering both tang and cream but mostly savoury-accented fruit. Sticks and stones, so to speak. It's good now but it will get better.
