

Kooyong Ferrous Pinot Noir 2016 – Reviews

Always my favourite pinot of the stable for structural reasons alone: the tannins are earthy and ferric, as the name implies. Nothing gritty, though. A magical carpet to carry and obviate the sweetness of the fruit: Bing cherry, blood plum and root spice. A welcome respite. Long, highly complex and flush.

Blind Tasting. Australian Pinot Noir Panel Tasting.

Lots of ripe berry fruit, with blood plum, cherry and toasty oak aromas. Delicious mouth-flooding texture, masses of charm and pleasure.

It really is hard to choose a favourite from among the stellar 2016 single-vineyard pinots from Mornington Peninsula standout Kooyong - but the complex and savoury Ferrous just gets the nod in an all-star cast. The ironstone pebbles in the 20-year-old Tuerong vineyard give the wine terrific architecture with the tannins providing the framework in which quality dark cherry fruit characters and hints of spice lead the way with support from largely aged French oak barriques. The fruit here is beautifully layered with earthiness, structure and length. I'm happy to give this 96/100 and to bet most buyers find it too delicious right now to even think of cellaring it.

Look forward to these Kooyong single vineyard wines each year.

True to the vintage. Less seduction and/or sweetness to the fruit; a greater sense of gravity to the tannin and overall structure. That said it's not an underpowered wine in any way; indeed the flavours charge through the palate at a rate of knots. Dried herbs, roasted nuts, brackeny notes, ripe black cherry. A chicory aspect. Oak here, cedary and smoky, laces its way throughout. From start to finish, the quality is excellent.

Stylish, savoury and textural; wild aromas of red flowers, blood plums and baked earth; bright cherry/plum fruit, gravelly tannins.
