

Port Phillip Estate Shiraz 2018 – Reviews

The Wine Front, August 2019

Campbell Mattison

It sees whole bunches, it's wild yeast fermented, it's from a tiny patch of estate vineyard (less than a hectare), and it's bottled unfined.

It's its usual savoury self. The wine is noted for its white pepper notes and they are clearly on display here, though not to the extent they sometimes are. Garden herb/bunch notes, black pepper, a walk through the garden, a cool succulence. Tannin is fine, assertive and peppery at once. Hold tight here; this wine needs a couple of years to find its feet.
