

Kooyong Faultline Chardonnay 2022 – Reviews

Halliday Australian Wine Companion, August 2024

Jane Faulkner

Poor flowering, low yields, excellent wines. At least that’s something. This is shimmering with lemon, grapefruit, white nectarine plus a light spray of spice, oak and nougat-like lees. The acidity is superfine and pith-like, rendering the palate linear and long. This is a stylish, classy Chardonnay.

Lots of nougat, spice, grapefruit, nectarine, mint and white flowers. It’s bright, but smooth, lime and almond, unctuous in texture and delivers power, intensity and flavour on a finish of excellent pithy grip. An impressive wine.

Year after year, this wine exhibits a particular deep-veined concentration of flavour. Upfront citrus notes, pear, stone fruits, spice and honeysuckle. A textural mouthful, nutty and nougat with more vanillin oak on show against the fruit. Cool climate acidity enhanced by a cool year means there is plenty of life ahead.

Light lemon hue. White peach, pineapple, broken quartz and hint of bacon fat aromatics. Palate is detailed, fine and filled with tension. Acidity drives white fruits and salty minerality across the palate. Layered off that there’s smoky bacon and warmed cashews adding character. It’s lively and driven, the finish eventually coming with a bright and cleansing lift.
