

Quartier Pinot Gris 2025 – Reviews

The WineFront, April 2026

I sat with this for a while, or for longer than I needed to, because I was enjoying it so much. It has body but it also feels zippy. It tastes of pears and apples but there are other more exotic fruit influences here, along with herbal inflections, and excellent texture too; not too much of the latter, just enough to make it feel polished. There's a floral aspect to the aromatics. This wine is money well spent.

Quartier is the entry level label for Mornington Peninsula producers Port Phillip Estate and Kooyong and offers excellent drinking without a hefty price tag. Pinot Gris is enjoying immense popularity right now, and this one is in the zone for immediate enjoyment. Made by highly credentialed Tim Perrin from quality local fruit, it offers a style that sits midway between gris and grigio and paired impressively with old school fish and chips.
