

Port Phillip Estate Morillon Pinot Noir 2025 – Reviews

Wine Front, JUNE 2026

Gary Walsh

This is from a 0.4 hectare parcel from the oldest block PPE has on Red Hill, planted 1987. 10% whole bunch and 16% new oak. Red fruit, cherry, hazelnut and spice, red flowers and mint. It's light to medium-bodied with peppery pumice stone tannin offering firm but fine grip, strawberry and spice carrying on a finish of excellent length, some roasted red capsicum sweetness in the aftertaste. It's a distinct wine, and I like it very much.

nice drive of juicy acidity aid the flow of cherry and red berries, wild herbs with hints of saltbush and a light savouriness that is warmly embraced on the long finish. This is a cracker of a Pinot Noir.

There is something truly special about older vines grown in good places that seem to almost effortlessly produce stunning flavours. Year after year, Morillon – sourced from some of the maker's oldest pinot vines and grown on iron and magnesium-rich soils on the Mornington Peninsula - shows a sense of class in the glass. Here, in 2025 we see a sour cherry light savouriness contributing an added layer of flavour with a heavy accent of wild herbs. Delightful! The more you look, the more you see and taste. Aromas are wild in saltbush, garrique – a real maritime feel – mixing with cherry, cranberry, fennel seed, caraway, earth and dusty cocoa. The palate opens beautifully fresh and alive, there is energy to burn in this youngster – a good sign. Fine tannins and a
